A Talk on
"What the Courts are Now Saying About Delays"
By

Kevin Reeves
Thursday, 28 February 2013

Brief Synopsis

Delays are inherent in construction and engineering projects, however they are probably the most misunderstood subject across the industry. This talk explores the subject in respect of the methods and core principles of delay analysis based on what the courts are now saying.

Outline:

- Preferred methodologies for delay analysis
- Concurrent delays and rejection of the apportionment approach
- What does "concurrent" mean?
- Concurrent delays and the prevention principle
- Prospective vs retrospective analysis
